

Landscapes: the Journal of the International Centre for Landscape and Language

Volume 3
Issue 2 Hydrobotanica

Article 23

2013

Balga, Jarrahdale, Western Australia

John Ryan
Edith Cowan University

Recommended Citation

Ryan, J. (2009). Balga, Jarrahdale, Western Australia. Landscapes: the Journal of the International Centre for Landscape and Language, 3(2).
Retrieved from <http://ro.ecu.edu.au/landscapes/vol3/iss2/23>

This Poetry is posted at Research Online.
<http://ro.ecu.edu.au/landscapes/vol3/iss2/23>

Balga, Jarrahdale, Western Australia by John Ryan

beyond the slender jarrah stalks parsing the lazuline into snaggy bits is the roar, like an indomitable river hammering rocks on a violent descent out of some snowy silence:
 the boom of terrestrial pilots
 on burning bitumen.
before me, a song flies by, pure song,
only song, of a bodiless fluttering katydid;
between the metronomic clicking,
the bush breathes out an off-beat whistle
and for all I know, below: Alph, the sacred river runs through a chasm in Xanadu.
somewhere a siren sings sweetly
for a grasstree, but here, neither tree, nor grass, nor lily—not a black boy but a balga—this two-trunked oldster splits into heaven, offering:
 covenant in its roots
 dark shelter in its limn.

John C. Ryan is a second-year Ph.D. candidate at Edith Cowan University. His dissertation invokes the writer-as-botanist tradition of John Clare, Henry David Thoreau, and Pablo Neruda to create poetic interpretations of the unusual and stunning flora of Southwest Australia. He is a graduate of the University of Lancaster's M.A. in Environmental Philosophy, and his research interests include ecophilosophy, landscape writing, and the human-plant relationship.